foreword

The Whitney Museum's Annual Exhibitions of Contemporary American Art have been held, in one form or another, since 1932. Work is selected by the Museum's staff and is invited, not juried. Following a tradition established by Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney when the Museum was founded, no prizes are given; instead, a number of works are usually purchased from each Annual for the Museum's permanent collection. Today the exhibitions are devoted to painting and to sculpture in alternate years.

The purpose of the Annuals has always been to survey the current state of American art. Hence only recent works are shown. Hence, too, the geographical coverage is as wide as the Museum can make it. Aided by a Ford Foundation grant, the Museum's curators travel extensively to search out the most interesting paintings and sculpture being produced in various parts of the country.

But it has become more apparent every year that an exhibition of this size can no longer even approximate a cross section of the creative trends of the moment. The growing number of serious artists, the growing size of their works, and the growing tendency of both painting and sculpture to escape their traditionally-self-contained limits and become events in the environment—all militate against the possibility of a "fair" survey. Increasingly we have elected to concentrate (insofar as we are physically able) on presenting those new directions which seem to us to be generating the most creative excitement, as well as representing those established artists whose work has deepened, grown or changed in ways that contribute more than a repetition of past success to the development of our contemporary art.
